Student Power Is Issue Elsewhere

With the uproar at Lawrence concerning student power still of great interest, perhaps it would be of value to note what has been happening at other schools in the Midwest Conference.

At nearby Ripon, a proposal for extended women's visiting hours has been sent to the faculty for approval. The present situation allows for Sunday afternoon visitation, and the new proposal adds Friday and Sunday evenings from 8:00 to 1:00.

At Carleton, the Student Senate has approved a student protest against the mandatory attendance rule for convocations during the next scheduled convocation. In addition, the administration announced that there will be no change in school condemnation of drug usage, but the personal views of the deans varied and the students were assured that there would be no room checks.

Student Senate of Beloit College has formed an Honor System Committee to consider revision of existing student honor systems and possible new ones. It is significant that the Honor System Committee pertains to all facets of student life, and is not broken down into specific areas.

A new trial period for an honor system during exams has been proposed at Cornell College. Such a trial failed in 1960. The volunteer, charitable organization at Cornell, Campus Chest (equivalent to Lantern), is considering sending equal aid to the civilians of North and South Vietnam.

In the area of free, experimental schools offering courses with no-credit and organized by students, St. Olaf is already operating one with almost 400 students, and Monmouth and Carleton are planning to begin them soon. Monmouth has also received a proposal that both courses and faculty be evaluated each year by the Student Senate.

Chambers Reports on NSA; Blanket Rule To Be Studied

Monday night's Student Senate meeting was highlighted by the reports of David Chambers and Jim Snodgrass on the NSA conference which they attended last weekend. Also, a committee was formed to investigate the blanket rule and to look into present guidelines of social offenses and punishments.

Details of the reports on the NSA Student Power Conference appear elsewhere in this issue. Chambers stated that to legally attain student power, the students must not concern themselves with specific issues such as open dorms or the car issue, but with "our own rights, our own self-respect, our own dignity."

In addition to his report, Chambers announced that he will attempt to attend as many different constituency meetings in the dorms and frat houses as possible. He will begin doing this soon after Christmas vacation.

Jake Stockinger made a motion to form a committee to examine the blanket rule and the ambiguities which it presents in terms of social offenses and their punishment.

Stockinger hopes that this committee will try to answer whether social offenses should be punished academically or socially. He

MARK WILMOT, ANN FINNEY, AND ANN ELLIOT, recently elected to the J-Board, sat in judgement of fellow students in Dean Broderick's office last week. David Chambers, one of the students charged with "variance of the aims of the University," challenged the legality of the Judicial Board at its lengthy Tuesday afternoon session.

Six Get Disciplinary Probation

Students Receive Discipline For Obstructing Recruiters

By CINDY HENNEY

Six Lawrentians have been found guilty of "acting in variance with the goals of Lawrence University," due to their participation in the obstructing demonstration involving armed forces recruiters Tuesday, Nov. 7.

The six, including Anthony Vaughan, James Noble, David Chambers, Marcia Wilson, Timothy Dietrich and David Eckhardt, were charged with creating a demeaning situation by placing the recruiters in a suppliant position, and were placed on disciplinary probation following sessions with J-Board, Dean Mary Morton, and Dean of Men Kenneth R. Venderbush.

In the course of the demonstration, a large sign blocking Union Street detained the departure of two marine corps recruiters. Vice President Marshall Hulbert persuaded the recruiters to ask the demonstrators to allow them to pass.

According to Vaughan, the group, all members of Students for a Democratic Society, wished to create a "symbolic situation" by confronting the recruiters. They presented them with three alternatives, including "using force, using their smarts or asking to leave," he said. "The army chose force, the navy its smarts and the marines ended up by asking us if they could pass," he added.

Dean Francis L. Broderick stated that, while the university encourages free speech and protest, the obstructing actions placed the recruiters in a degrading position and interfered with their rights.

He said that the six participants were "booked" and charged with acting in a way in variance with the goals of the university, and given the choice of appearing before the J-Board or before the dean of men or the dean of women, to have their cases judged.

Broderick declined to reveal the names of the six. Miss Wilson chose to appear before Dean Morton, Dietrich and Eckhardt chose Dean Venderbush, and Chambers, Vaughan and Noble elected to appear before the J-Board.

In all six cases, the defendants were found to be guilty and given the penalty of being on disciplinary probation for the remainder of the present term and all of second term.

The punishment, in effect, constitutes a notation on the records of those involved that they have acted in a way contrary to Lawrence's goals, and will influence the degree of punishment for any subsequent violations.

J-Board heard Vaughan and Noble's cases Saturday afternoon, and Chambers' Tuesday afternoon, due to the fact that Chambers was not in Appleton at the time of the Saturday session.

According to Dean Broderick, the J-Board decisions were reached without knowledge of the action of the deans, in spite of the similarity of the decisions.

All J-Board members acted in the cases of Vaughan and Noble; Steve Ponto, because of his Student Senate membership, did not participate in Chambers' case.

The J-Board sessions lasted approximately two hours, and followed normal procedure, with the presentation of the charge by Dean Venderbush, followed by the presentation of the defendants' case. None of the defendants brought witnesses to the session.

The defendants pleaded innocent to the charge, due to their belief that they were not interfering with the recruiters' rights, because they were willing to allow them to pass. Their purpose was, according to Vaughan, to cause discussion and make other students aware of the situation.

A J-Board member said the decision was reached following considerable discussion, and was based on the general principle that no one has the right to prevent access of anyone to any place, allowing him to pass only by requesting permission.

CONCERT CHOIR TO PERFORM

The Lawrence Concert Choir and Brass Ensembles will be featured in a musical program to take place at 8:00 p.m., Monday, Nov. 27, 1967 in Harper Hall. The choir is under the direction of Karle J. Erickson, the brass choir will be directed by Derald DeYoung.

Accreditation Group To Judge Lawrence

This spring the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools will make another of its periodic visits to the Lawrence campus. The North Central Association is a regional organization with the responsibility of judging the accreditation of colleges in the midwest area.

Marshall B. Hulbert, vice-president of Lawrence, termed the visitation "routine." He explained that the committee is checking to see that Lawrence is "trying to do its best" as an educational institution.

Accreditation by the North Central Association assures that credits earned at Lawrence will be accepted by other accredited colleges. Students who are planning to transfer or enter graduate school require this credit recognition. Accreditation also makes the university eligible for certain financial grants.

To maintain its accreditation, Lawrence must present a statement of its goals and activities to a committee of two or more men. The committee is composed of administrators from other colleges under the jurisdiction of the North Central Association. Both Curtis W. Tarr, president of Lawrence, and Hulbert have served as accreditors.

Currently, Hulbert is conferring with various department heads, deans, librarians, and other campus administrators.

Other data to be collected and submitted to the accrediting team includes: a statement of trends and purposes, a geographic breakdown of the student body, university budgets, faculty class loads, the number and types of degrees awarded by the university, number of volumes in the library, and other related information.

All the information will be combined to create a "profile" of life at Lawrence.

FRANCIS L. BRODERICK arrays himself in judicial robes prior to presiding over the Judicial Board last Tuesday afternoon. The J-Board punished six students, including the president of the Student Senate, with disciplinary probation last week.

FROM THE EDITORIAL BOARD

Efforts to introduce off-campus living have been characterized by supra-procedural maneuvering: deliberation on the off-campus living proposal bypassed the Student Senate, the Student-faculty committees and a majority of the faculty — a complete reversal of the normal process. Moreover, these groups still have not been consulted.

The plan seems to be offered as an alternative to the Committee on Administration's group visitation plan as a bargain or an exchange. This ploy is hardly a substitute for creative, purposeful thinking in the area of social change.

Furthermore, off-campus living in itself has many drawbacks: it contradicts the "community of scholars" atmosphere the University espouses; it decentralizes student activity—organizations, student government, fraternities, and sports stand to suffer if many students live away from the campus.

If this measure is offered in order to evade the real issues, dealing with those issues will be that much more difficult in the future.

We strongly oppose the off-campus living proposal, for the peremptory way it is being presented, for its intrinsic drawbacks, and for its attempts to pose as a panacea for Lawrence's social problems.

Power — Not Subservience

Senate Officers Discuss Views On Student Power

By STEVE BOGUE and NEIL HILLER

Dave Chambers, president of student senate, and Jim Snodgrass, vice president, explained their views on student power upon returning from the NSA (National Student Association) conference on that subject held in Minneapolis last weekend.

In interviews with the Laurentian and in presentations to the Student Senate, Chambers and Snodgrass gave their opinions on the conference and their ideas for putting plans to achieve student power into effect on this campus.

Very Plausible

"I expected that I would throw out my ideas and then have to defend them," Chambers said, "but instead, I found that most of the people there conceived them as very plausible."

Chambers emphasized that the student power movement was not essentially a radical one, in fact "it is really very conservative," he said. "All we really want are the rights due to us, our Constitutional rights."

The senate president went on to add "we are not asking for extra-legal rights: we are asking that the University not impose extra-legal restrictions upon us."

"Private universities consider themselves above federal and state constitutions," but the NSA and ACLU (American Civil Liberties Union) will provide funds for test cases to prove that this isn't true, he added.

Although Chambers did not see Lawrence as so conservative as the "small Catholic girls' schools" represented at the conference, he does think that in social privileges "Lawrence is miles and miles behind the schools to which it considers itself equal in academic areas."

Impotent

"We have little control over the decisions which effect our non-academic lives, and virtually no control over our academic lives," Chambers said. "Even in the student-faculty committees, students are only asked for opinions and given no final power."

If the existing channels continue to fail, Chambers thought, that student power should be wielded, but use "methods different from those of previous administrations."

"When you march in front of the president's house, you are begging; you are impotent and admitting it," said Chambers. "Sending a request upstairs is subservience, not power," he added.

Chambers sees that the students' responsibility is to "put ourselves in a bargaining position" by examining the campus power structure for exploitable weaknesses. Other tactics, said Chambers "should be used only as last-ditch efforts."

"Students should realize that they can wield their power legally without being in danger of retaliation from the school," said Chambers.

To get the student power movement going on campus, it is necessary to have "a majority of students to support it, and a significant minority willing to put time and effort into it," Chambers said.

He concluded: "Students should recognize the real power they have and employ it, and recognize the powers they do not have, and get them."

Snodgrass' views on student power were essentially the same as those of Chambers, although couched in somewhat different terms. Said Snodgrass: "Students must initiate not only changes in regulations, but in the channels by which those regulations may be altered."

"The administration ought to develop a sense of trust of students, not wariness." If the traditional lack of trust in students interferes with genuine communication with the administration, "then students are obligated to try other means of making themselves heard," Snodgrass said.

The senate vice president went on to say that students must give the administration reason to respect them. "This too must be one of the aims of the student power movement," he said.

Snodgrass also sees the movement as necessarily a unified effort of all students. "In the 'real world' all people have the same legal rights . . . but when one comes to college, it seems that this idea has vanished."

"Responsibility can only be demonstrated if the restrictions on a student will allow him room to make decisions," said Snodgrass. "If the restrictions are too inflexible, personal responsibility can never be attained."

Snodgrass feels that students must demonstrate that they can handle the responsibility they demand, and lacking it "that they can do something about it."

Said Snodgrass, "Lawrence is interested as an academic institution in striving for scholarly excellence and creativity. If the University infringes on the student's freedom and makes him feel burdened with trivial rules, the University's potential can never be fully realized. The student power movement is an attempt to create a genuine social and academic community."

The Dusk Song of Medusa OR My Heart Has Dishpan Hands

By JIMMY GAPE

(With apologies to budding female playwrights)

Cast:

Old Woman—ugly, misshapen, incredibly hideous

Young Woman—pretty, slightly crazed, must be able to stare off into the distance well

Young Man—Irish, thin and consumptive, moss hangs from his hair

The Setting—To the left there is a rock from under which the old woman arises. There is an altar and a cliff. The entire stage is engulfed irregularly with smoke and fog.

Scene I

The fog becomes dense and a light reveals a low rock from which Old Woman arises.

OW: I worship Hecate. There are sage roots twisted in my hair. A turtle cannot exist outside its shell. (There is a significant pause so that the audience might ponder these cryptic statements.) I shall tell you what will happen. A young girl has come. Sense you not her presence? She is a slight daft but a real nice kid. She will meet a young man. They will make love-offstage, of course—she will cause him to die, she will die, and I will then say, "I told you so, didn't I?" Brace yourself, gang! This is going to take awhile. You might say that this whole drama will transcend time. (Smoke engulfs OW and a stifled cough is heard from within the fog).

Scene II

The Young Woman now appears staring blithely off into the distance. She does not speak in a normal tone of voice, but she shouts as her eyes wander.

YW: My heart is a dancing Chinese cabbage. (She twirls significantly.) To be or not to be, that is the broken bodkin. (She runs up to OW, who scowls.)

OW: Shut up, you dirty little slut. Let's get the show on the road. I have to get home and feed the kids. I hope you don't think that I got all day to just sit around up here and say mysterious things. Quit screwing around. I'm sick and tired of all this damn nonsense, so get on the stick.

Smoke curls, wind blows, lightning strikes.

YW: Lo, I hear the boy coming. (She dances a jig, the OW scowls some more, smoke engulfs all.)

Scene III

Young Man arrives with moss in his hair. He sniffs the air.

YM: There is sage in the air.

YW: Hey, knock it off. The old hag says that we got to play it straight 'cuz she's got to get home and feed the kids.

YM: (With disgust.) Rats! I sort of like speaking in riddles. It disguises the fact that you don't really have a lot to say.

YW: Yea, I know whatcha mean.

OW: I worship Hecate!

YW: Big hairy deal.

YM: You told us to knock it off, so quit playin' the big mystic yourself.

OW: A pox onto thee!

Lightning strikes the YM. He disintegrates into a pile of sage. YW's soliloquy.

YW: You know, he was right. There is sage in the air. Oh, woe. Born inside out, I was doomed. My life is a fatal arrow plunged into a ripe turnip. There is broken glass in my soul. My eyes burn with carrot juice. An avocado strikes my ear. My life is a soggy Hostess cupcake. I die. (Dies.)

Smoke again engulfs the stage and begins to annoy the audience which begins to cough.

Scene IV

Old Woman reappears. She speaks in verse.

OW: I just don't know what to say,

A tulip spoke to me today.

It was the one that I call Blanche She puckered her petals and yelled avalanche.

I just don't know what to say,

A tulip saved my life today.

She disappears. Wolves howl in the distance. Sage fills the air. The audience leaves in a coma.

DOWNER CLOCK

Decorative 'Gum Machine' Graces Lobby Of Library

By JIM KEHOE

The massive, seventy-nine year old clock, now gracing the library lobby was recently rescued from the late Alsted House prior to the arrival of the wreckers.

The three hundred pound antique had lain dormant in the house since its arrival four years ago along with seven other clocks as part of the Milwaukee-Downer College "dowry." However, with its works now repaired, its German chimes relieve the deafening silence of the library on the quarter hour.

Already, the clock has earned a place in Lawrence's collective heart under the affectionate nickname of "the bubble gum machine."

Before appearing at Lawrence, the clock stood in Greene Hall on the Downer campus. It was presented to the college in 1946 by Charles H. Palmer of Lutherville, Maryland, one time secretary of the Milwaukee-Downer board of trustees.

The clock is 8 feet, 3/4 inches tall, and made from a piece of solid oak. The works were manufactured in the factory of A. J. Jennens and Son, Great Sutton Street, London.

Upon close examination, the many intricate carvings reveal a Disneyland of ornate gargoyles and griffins. The original drawings for many of the carvings were taken from designs in the Cathedral of Saint Daru in Pierot, France. Records show that the cabinet maker placed himself deep in the woods of southwestern Germany during the period of his creation. Actual work hours totaled 15,769, not including the time spent cutting branches for small inlays and the time spent waiting for the dew to burn off so the assistants could work barefoot, as was their custom for unknown reasons.

Though now serving a purely utilitarian function, the clock was originally designed as an aesthetic representation of many world religions. As mentioned, the carvings are from St. Chasbody's church, the gargoyles are demonic and the symbols near the face are Zen Buddhist yin-yang representations.

Though hardly an historical object, the pendulum chamber of the clock apparently served as the resting or hiding place of one diminutive transient who carved the name, "F. Baggin's" into the inner panel.

Woodwind Quintet Plays Wednesday

On Wednesday, November 29, at 8 p.m. in Harper Hall, Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia will present the University of Wisconsin Woodwind Quintet. The quintet features John Barrows, French horn; Robert Cole, flute; Glenn Bowen, clarinet and quintet spokesman; Harry Peters, oboe; and Richard Lottridge, bassoon. The quintet was completed with the addition of Lottridge in 1965. Prior to that the group bassoonist was a faculty wife. During the 1965-66 academic year the group performed throughout the state.

Lawrence Gridmen Make All-Conference

The Lawrence Vikings, who were coached to an eight-win Midwest Conference championship season by Ron Roberts, placed a total of eleven men on the conference's first and second honor teams. Next numerically were Monmouth and Beloit, with seven men each.

In spite of the fact that the Vikes were the highest scoring and highest offensive team in the league, and the only conference team to be ranked among the top 25 small college teams in statistics published by the National Collegiate Athletic Association, only one Lawrence man placed on the first offensive team—Quarterback Chuck McKee, a repeater from last year.

McKee shared conference scoring honors with Mike Schmiesing, St. Olaf halfback. Both men accounted for 78 points during the season. McKee's total offense amounted to 1772 yards in 296 plays, an average of 6.2 yards per try.

Also named to the first defensive team were Dale Schuppara, end; Gary Hietpas, linebacker; Ken Koskelin and John Biolo, both deep backs. This is a repeat performance for Hietpas and Koskelin, both of whom were on the 1966 defensive first squad.

On the second team were: Offensive unit—Joe Patterson and Paul Henningsen, tackles; Steve Figi, tailback, and Dick Witte, fullback. Defensive unit—Dennis DeCock, tackle, and Dennis Kirchoff, deep back. Figi was named to the second-team offensive squad last year; he repeated the honor in spite of playing less than half the 1967 season before being benched with an injury.

Basketball Team To Begin Season

With the season opener just a little over two weeks away, Coach Clyde Rusk of the Lawrence basketball team has started to step up the tempo of early drills.

Rusk has six lettermen back from a team which posted an overall record of nine wins and 13 setbacks last season. In the Midwest Conference, Lawrence had a 6-12 mark and finished in eighth place.

Rusk, beginning his fifth season as coach, is optimistic about the prospects for the coming campaign. "We should be much stronger in rebounding, and the experience the underclassmen have gained will begin to pay off. This shapes up as the most promising team I have had since I've been here," he said.

The 1967-68 team again will be dominated by underclassmen. The only seniors on the team are Brian Bock and Don Brooke, both lettermen. Bock ranked as the team's second-best scorer last season with 260 points while Brooke had 39 points in a reserve roll.

Other lettermen back include Mike Andrews, who scored 186 points last season; Brad Childs, 158 points; Dave Roozen, 47 points; Wayne Steinbach, 13 points, and Bob Townsend, fourth-highest scorer with 225 markers.

JUNIOR LETTERMAN BRAD CHILDS takes a jump shot near the charity line in a recent preseason basketball practice. The Vike bucket squad opens against Milton on December 2. The annual varsity-freshmen game is scheduled for November 28.

STUDENT RECITALS

The second and third programs in the Conservatory Student Recital series will be presented late this month.

At 3:00 p.m. Tuesday, Nov. 28, 1967 in the Chapel, the first recital will feature Frank Rippl, Margaret Schafer, Dennis Young, Sarkis Halajian, Fred Schuetze, and Paul Emmons.

The second program in the series will be a junior recital performed by Lana Kollath, a piano major. At 3:00 p.m. Thursday, Nov. 30, 1967 in Harper Hall, Miss Kollath will play various works of Scarlatti, Brahms, Martin, Hindemith and Franck.

All students are invited to attend these student recitals.
